

Yet, perhaps reflecting a certain degree of positivism and lego-centrism, the objects of analysis are usually Canadian laws, policies, officials, or an aggregate citizenry rather than those groups and people who make up the diverse, differentiated, and fragmented society

Graham Hudson

Multiculturalism and the Canadian Constitution,
46 Osgoode Hall L.J. 675 (2008) (book review)