

NOTES

Shannon Russell (Big Trouble in Little Print, p. 17): I would like to thank Professors Ross E. Davies and Magdalena Sánchez for their invaluable guidance and for imparting their commitment to proper citation and research technique.

Leslie H. Southwick & J. Alexandra Bruce (The John Minor Wisdom Courthouse: The Fifth Circuit's New Orleans Home, p. 27): We owe much to Fifth Circuit Librarian Sue Creech and Assistant Librarians Brent Hightower, Marian Drey, and Paul Wallace. They had conducted extensive research for the 2015 centennial of the building. They collected relevant documents from their prior research concerning the construction of the building, scanned newspaper articles, and in myriad other ways applied their talents to this historical project. Our thanks to all.

CREDITS

All items published with permission of the copyright holder, if any.

Page 2: James Madison. Doll courtesy of Chug Roberts, TheCapitol.Net. Photograph by the Green Bag.

Page 4: Judge Harold Kahn's bobblehead collection. Courtesy of Judge Kahn.

Page 7: Germaine de Staël (1880). The Miriam and Ira D. Wallach Division of Art, Prints and Photographs: Print Collection, The New York Public Library.

Page 31: The Post Office Building (and courthouse) in 1915, viewed from Magazine Street. Courtesy of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Page 32: One of Attilio Piccirilli's rooftop portrayals of history, agriculture, commerce, and industry on a corner of the 600 Camp Street building. Courtesy of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Page 39: Well-filled benches in the en banc courtroom of the 600 Camp Street building, circa 1983. Courtesy of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Page 40: The en banc courtroom of the 600 Camp Street building today. Courtesy of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Page 42: The 600 Camp Street building today. Courtesy of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Page 47: Mary Simmerson Cunningham Logan. Mrs. John A. Logan, Thirty Years in Washington frontispiece (1901).

Page 77: U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg (Oct. 1, 2010). Steve Petteway, Collection of the Supreme Court of the United States.